Dear Friend of Green Cleaning Products LLC,

Today is the 40th anniversary of the first Earth Day in 1970. It is quite remarkable that the movement has grown from an anti-establishment "teach-in" to mainstream and integration into our everyday lives. Check out the AP review of the past 40 years below. Watching the 1970 TV story of the first Earth Day from ABC News is even more fun!

First Earth Day on April 22, 1970

On April 22, 1970, the very first Earth Day was marked by protests and marches in the United States when more than 20 million people joined in demonstrations across the United States. Colleges organized teach-ins to draw attention to the pressing environmental issues of air and water pollution. A part of New York City's Fifth Avenue was shut down to accommodate the marching crowds. Congress recessed so that members could join the days' activities. Organizers said it was the largest national protest to date in U.S. history.

An Earth Day Evolution: from Anti-Establishment to Politically Correct

There was no "Green Movement" yet and little talk of global warming. Instead, the original Earth Day 40 years ago emphasized "ecology" and goals like cleaning up pollution and litter — along with a more anti-establishment vibe than today.
